

Possibilities:

The top of the mountain was, at one point leveled and it appears that, when it was leveled, cultural debris was thrown down the slopes. That is why there are scattered sherds on the slopes. They then dug a water storage depot on the top of the hill. The dirt from the depo was piled up next to the storage house. This dirt also contained cultural debris. If this is so then there was, at one time, quite a deep cultural deposit here that is now totally destroyed.
