OPENED [L9027] was opened as a technical change to incorporate most of the square into one locus when [L9026] and [L9018] were closed. DEFINITION/LIMITS [L9027] extended from [W9019] and the rubble along the south baulk northward over the entire square.

CLOSED [L9027] was closed when a kurkar surface was found extending northward from [W9019]. This surface was preserved for about 2 1/2 meters north of [W9019] along the west baulk and for about 2 meters east of the west baulk.

RELATION TO OTHER ELEMENTS [L9000] floated above [L9027]. The soil and the floor [L9027] reached [W9019] immediately under the flat stones that adjoined the header wall. Traces of floor [L9027] can be seen in the north and east ^{west} baulks and was found under three stones that formed a line

(wall?) extending from the east baulk about 1 meter south of the NE corner. This may indicate that floor [L9027] originally extended further, but the floor was not preserved in the northern and eastern parts of the square.

MATRIX Soil was medium brown near the southeast corner, lighter brown and sandy in the northeast and northwest. Rubble was fairly heavy with 5-10cm stones over the surface. Shards from 2 pits in connecting positions continued from [L9026].

3 aligned stones appeared emerging from the east baulk 1m south of the northeast corner.
