Summary _____

Opened: To excavate material on top of possible mudbrick wall socle

Limits (N) Bounded by N bank of AI32

(S) Bordered by L9730

(E) Bounded by W9728

(W) Bordered by L9530 & L9507

Closed: Not closed; end of season

Matrix: Crumbly gray-brown mudbrick debris material, few pottery shards, fist- to double-fist sized Cobble stones; special find: nearly complete lamp (basalt #97149)

Relations: L9733 is a cleaning locus, containing non-stratified wash caused by erosion since 1987 and 1989 seasons. As such, there are no loci above, and none below since the 1991 season ended before any were opened. Because there were large stones sticking out from the locus, and mudbrick debris above, it was hoped that we would be able to find a stone socle for a N-S mudbrick wall. Thus far, however, the stones formed no feature, and were merely floating in mudbrick debris. To the N, L9733 reaches the N bank of AI32. To the S, the material of L9733 and L9730 are probably identical. To the E, L9733 reaches W9728, and may contain debris from the collapse of the mudbrick wall itself. To the W, L9507 floats above L9733. L9507 is described as a small patch of hard packed clay-like material, and was not completely excavated by the end of the 1989 season. Also to the W, the material of L9530 and L9733 may be identical. L9530 is described as containing mudbrick debris in this part of the locus. L9530 lies partially on top of L9733.

Additional Observations/Value: As a cleaning locus, L9733 is most likely disturbed.
